Maasai warriors

Sanctuary, the only place in Kenya where visitors can see these highly endangered and remarkably intelligent primates.

One of today's most memorable experiences will be a special visit with Najin and her daughter, Fatu, the last two northern white rhinos on Earth. While southern white rhino populations have made an encouraging recovery, the northern subspecies has been pushed to the brink of extinction. Following the death of Sudan, the last male northern white rhino, in 2018, the subspecies became functionally extinct.

However, there is still hope! Scientists have preserved genetic and reproductive material from northern white rhinos and, through groundbreaking advances in biotechnology and IVF, have successfully created embryos. As neither Najin nor Fatu can carry a pregnancy, researchers are working toward transferring these embryos into southern white rhino surrogate mothers, offering a potential lifeline for the subspecies.

Najin and Fatu live under round-the-clock protection at Ol Pejeta, where dedicated conservationists continue their extraordinary efforts to save the northern white rhino. Our visit offers a rare opportunity to meet these remarkable animals while directly supporting their protection and ongoing conservation research through our entrance fees.

It is an unforgettable wildlife encounter and a powerful reminder that, through science, conservation, and continued support, the northern white rhino's story may not be over yet.

Overnight in the Sweetwaters Reserve.

DAY 4 TO LAKE NAIVASHA

After an early morning game drive inside the Sweetwaters Reserve, we make our way to Lake Naivasha.

DAY 6 MAASAI MARA NATIONAL PARK

The Maasai Mara, located in the Rift Valley Province in the southwestern part of Kenya, was established back in 1967. About 10 centuries ago the Cushitic people settled in this region and the Maasai, a warrior tribe, are descendants of these people. The Maasai can still be found in these regions living off the cattle they herd. They migrate in search of water and vegetation. The open savannah of flat grasslands and woodlands made up of acacia trees are a great place for elephants, giraffes and so much more.

What better way to explore this very special region than with a full day of game drives. Between game drives, when the sun is at the hottest, enjoy a swim in the pool or sit by the river in the hope of seeing hippos floating around. Take in the beautiful surroundings in the Maasai Mara on the direct path of the wildebeest migration. This African mecca is full of wonder and adventure as you will get to experience it first hand with wildlife all around you.
